GP the Musical: The Story Behind the Show

Many doctors have creative or performing bents, and general practice is full of fascinating stories and characters. So, in some ways, a musical written, directed and performed by GPs about GPs and their practices shouldn't be all that surprising.

Dr Genevieve Yates, a playwright with a performing background in musical theatre, had long dreamed of writing a musical, but knew she lacked the skills to do it alone. She found a co-writer in Dr Gerard Ingham when they met and performed in 'Simon and the GPettes' (the only 12 GP cover band in Australia, but that's another story).

Despite living 1600km apart, Gerard and Genevieve managed to develop the first draft in a matter of a few months. Tentatively, they asked a few trusted colleagues to review what they had penned. Relieved not to have received the response, "You should stick to writing prescriptions", they approached fellow GP, Dr Katrina Anderson, to join them as director.

A cast of GPs from around the country were selected by audition. The pre-recorded music was developed by mixing tracks recorded by GP musicians from around Australia with those of Gerard's Daylesford musician friends.

Distance barriers meant arranging rehearsals via Skype. As director, Katrina performed miracles in the mere two days of face-to-face rehearsals she was given to stage the show.

Initial performances last year in Bullarto, near Daylesford, and at a national GP conference in Melbourne received overwhelmingly positive responses from the general public and medical fraternity alike.

Genevieve and Gerard expanded the show, adding new dialogue and two new songs, and set their sights on the Melbourne International Comedy Festival.

And here they are – 11 GPs again taking time out from their day jobs to sing and dance about their day jobs!
